CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC!

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE.

WHEREAS it having become known to the Proprietors of Dr. Bright's Phosphodyne that a worthless imitation, bearing a similar name, is exported to India, China, &c., and is sold to the public as Dr. Bright's Phosphodyne, they feel it due to the public to specially caution them against this compound and request their most careful attention to the following distinctive characteristics of Dr. Bright's (the only genuine) Phosphodyne.

1st.—That Dr. Bright's Phosphodyne is sold only in cases.

2nd.—The words "Dr. Bright's Phosphodyne" are clearly blown in each bottle.

3rd.—The Registered Trade Mark and Signature of Patentes are printed on the label of every case.

4th.—Directions for use in all the following languages are enclosed in each case—

English, French, German, Italian, Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Danish, Turkish, Persian, Hindostani, Madrasse, Bengalee, Chinese, and Japanese.

Without which none can POSSIBLY be Genuine.

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE

Is the Only Reliable Remedy for NERVOUS AND LIVER COMPLAINTS

AND

FUNCTIONAL DERANGEMENTS.

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE is patronized by the Aristocracy and the Elite, extensively used in the Army and Navy, and strongly recommended by the leading Medical Practitioners.

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE

Is sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors throughout the Globe.

In India, China, &c., DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE is generally sold at an advance on the English Price.

The high Estimation in which Phosphodyne is held is unquestionably due to its administration, in this form. Therefore

ASK FOR

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE

And do not be persuaded to take any Useless and Possibly Dangerous Imitation.

CAUTION TO MEDICINE VENDORS.

The Trade Mark, Label, &c., of DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE are duly entered at Stationers' Hall, London, and are also registered in the Chief Cities of the World.

Chemists and Druggists are hereby warned that legal proceedings will be immediately instituted by the Authorized Agents, against any person or persons selling fraudulent imitations of DR. BRIGHT'S (the only genuine) PHOSPHODYNE, from this date, 1st October, 1878.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

The performance of "The Lily of Killarney" is further postponed until Saturday next, Mr. Vernon not being yet sufficiently recovered to play.

A SAILING match is being arranged for merchant ships' boats to-morrow, to start at 11 a.m., the occasion being Thanksgiving Day with our American friends. The entrance fee is $5 for each boat, the course being twice round Stone-cutter's Island. We hope to see a good fleet of boats face the starter; six boats are already entered, but entries can be effected up to the last moment.

We are glad to note that the interest of our Volunteers is likely to be kept up by out-door exercises other than mere drills and parades. A shooting match is announced to take place on Saturday next, when two prizes will be shot for. One prize is allotted to the man who makes the best score in the shortest time at 300, 250, and 200 yards, five shots at each range; any position, Snider rifle. The other prize to be shot for will fall to the lot of the non-commissioned officer or private who makes the highest score with 10 shots at 800 yards. Non-attendance at requisite drill may disqualify members.

We understand that Inspector Orley has organized a body of men (Chinese) numbering about one hundred for the Fire Brigade. These men have been enlisted from the markets, and are to receive payment according to the length of time they are engaged at actual work—the Government providing each of them with a suit of uniform. This addition has been made to the Brigade owing, we believe, to the accident in which P. C. Bond received his injuries.

Mr. Justice Russell sat in Summary Jurisdiction to-day. The cases were of very little interest to our readers. One man, a barber, was sent to one month's hard labour for giving wilful false testimony. It appears that he had sold his barber's shop and gone to Canton, and during his absence a creditor obtained judgment against him. He returned to the Colony, and his creditor then pressed for payment, the result being that the unhappy barber summoned another man for $12, which sum it was clearly proved the man of razors had already received. He will now have 30 days to deliberate on the folly of his ways.

At the Marine Court to-day, Thomas Collins, seaman belonging to the British barque Drumlogie, was charged by Henry Wayman, the master, with refusing duty. Defendant admitted having been absent from his ship without leave, but said that since then he had been too unwell to work. The doctor had prescribed for him, but as the medicine was the same as had been prescribed for another man and which made the man bad, he defendant would not take it. Defendant said he was better now and would return to his duty. He was ordered to forfeit ten days' pay for being absent without leave, and six days' pay for refusal of duty.

Police Intelligence.

(Both Magistrates sitting.)
27th Nov., 1878.

A DANGEROUS MAN.

Tang Ahing, a cook unemployed, was charged by Inspector Lindsay with being a person dangerous to the peace of the Colony, and was ordered to find security in $80 to answer any charge which might be brought against him; failing security, the case to be brought, to the notice of H. E. the Governor.

LARCENY.

Sam Ayl, a hawker, and Tang Aman, a coolie, pleaded guilty to stealing $14, the property of one Lai Ayan. They pleaded poverty as the cause of their crime. Three months' hard labour, the last 14 days to be in solitary confinement.

Mok Awer, a coolie, pleaded guilty to stealing a sheet of copper, the property of the Patent Slip & Dock Company. He was sent to 15 days' imprisonment, 14 days of which to be in solitary confinement, and to be exposed 6 hours in the stocks near the West Point Slip.

Pin Aha, a coolie, was sent to six months' hard labour, the last 14 days to be in solitary confinement, and to be exposed in the stocks for 6 hours, for stealing a piece of iron the property of the P. & O. Company valued at $6. There were three previous convictions against the accused.

TO-DAY'S FINES.

Cheng Pak-fuk, hawking fresh fish in Tai-ping-shan. Fined 50 cents.
William Murtha, seaman British ship Commaney, drunkenness and refusing to pay chair hire. Fined 50 cents and ordered to pay 30 cents amends.

Lo Aun, a hawker, hawking vegetables without license. Fined $1.
Cheng Aker, a shop-coolie, throwing stones into a brothel. Fined $1.
Lo Aun, occupant of House No. 15 Po-yan Street, throwing rubbish into the public streets. Fined $1.

Chun A-san, a hawker, hawking groundnuts without a license; pleaded want of time to procure a license. Fined $2.
Chan Apat, a coolie, and Li Ayan, disorderly conduct. Fined $5 and $1 respectively. The 2nd man charged the 1st with stealing $1, but was unable to prove the charge. The 1st defendant had been once before convicted.

A CHINESE WEDDING.

The very unusual circumstance of a Chinaman making a marriage for his son, and inviting all his "foreign friends" to be present—those whom he knew best by special invitation addressed to them, and others by advertisement in the newspapers—was an event which merits notice as for its rarity. Ah Mow is a Chinaman, who, arriving in Shanghai from Ningpo many years ago, commenced business in a very small way. He attended auctions, and anything he bought might be had for so small a commission additional to the price he had paid, that his shop became quite an attraction to those who required out-of-the-way articles, and who could not waste their time at the public sales. Gradually his shop became more and more extensive, and he began to charge a more definite profit on his purchases. His popularity and business still increasing, he was at length obliged to build suitable premises, and form an establishment worthy of his extending prosperity. The building is situated on the very extreme of the French Settlement, far away from the abodes of the foreign residents; yet so well was he known and his honorable dealing appreciated, that he has kept on his profitable career, exclusively supported by foreign patronage. It is not to be wondered at then that he has more than ordinary regard for those whose favour has made him the rich man he is reputed to be.

He has two sons, the younger of whom having arrived at a marriageable age, a wife was sought for him among the daughters of his countrymen of Ningpo, and one was selected whose father intimately connected with Ah Mow in business.

It appears that the youth has been a great favourite with his father ever since he had judgment sufficient to know right from wrong; and has by his good conduct given promise of not only performing the ordinary filial duties required of him, but of honourably maintaining the family name should he survive his parent. The father determined therefore that the occasion of his marriage should be marked with a profusion and a liberality which should prove the affection in which he held his son.

Accordingly great preparations were made, and the day fixed for the ceremony was Tuesday, the 12th instant—the hour 5 p.m.

Invitations were sent out on red paper enclosed in a large red envelope.

But as we have already said, just any should deem themselves excluded by not receiving a special invitation, an advertisement appeared inviting all friends.

We are not to suppose that the popularity of the giver of the feast was the sole reason of the gathering that ensued. Curiosity probably lent its aid. Be that as it may, the invitations were very largely responded to.

The compound on which the buildings are erected is not large. From the street an archway with a good-sized room on each side, ordinarily filled with furniture, leads into a paved courtyard; at a little distance on the right is a room generally devoted to ornamental furniture, vases and nick-nacks; a little further on is the shop, a long narrow room with two centre doors opposite to each other, and one side door; and behind this is a small building, divided into three rooms and used in the business. Besides other apartments for the family. The ceremony took place in the centre room in the last named edifice.

At the appointed hour a number of both ladies and gentlemen had arrived. They found the bride chair, which, as everyone knows forms an important part in the legality of a marriage in China, was already in position at the entrance of the room in which the ceremony was to take place. It was closed by a drop screen or curtain, and two female attendants, one of whom we believe was the go-between, the other a servant, were in front of it. The room was not a large one, and some tables arranged as an altar with handsomely decorated red candles upon it, besides a censer of incense smoking, and sundry pewter vases and other altar ornaments, occupied the portion of the room nearest the front. The back of the room was occupied by foreign ladies who had come earliest, for whom chairs had been placed. In two rooms forming wings to the above a great many visitors, both foreigners and Chinese, found seats; whilst outside there was quite a crowd of gentlemen.

In the chair was seated the bride, who had to wait patiently for a full hour, whilst the guests continued to assemble. It was nearly six o'clock before the bridegroom made his appearance, and entering most unceremoniously without the attendance of any friends he took his place at the altar at the inner part of the room. He had been preceded by a master of the ceremonies; and the musicians, (four boys and four women, who had been hitherto stationed at different portions of the compound, and played alternately), pressed into the room and took up a position on one side of the tables. The bride then, having first had some refreshment offered to her in the chair, came forth supported by the two women, one of whom held her by the waist behind, the other held her hands. It is impossible for a foreigner to describe correctly the bridal array, which, however, it must be understood, is all hired—both for the bride and bridegroom. The bridegroom had on a long satin robe with richly-embroidered badges both before and behind, mandarin hat and shoes; the lady's dress was a very loose tunic of rich material over a heavily-embroidered plaited skirt, with a bridal crown, from which a light scarlet veil descended on all sides completely hiding the head from view. An elderly woman seemed to have charge also of the young gentleman. The bride and bridegroom having been placed side by side in front of the altar, the M.O. said some ceremonial words; and ceasing, the musicians struck up; whilst the pair, kowtowed to the altar, all the movements being assisted by the female attendants. They then after some slight address, and again to the strains of music, kowtowed to each other, and once more, with like accompaniment, turned to the inside of the room and went through the same genuflections. So far the ceremony was ended; but now came a very trying ordeal for them. They had to go to every room on the premises in which tables for banqueting had been spread, and kowtow to the tables, and that included all of the rooms we have specified. The bride's veil was raised during this ceremony, that all might see her, and as she followed her husband from one to the other, gazed upon by all the assembled strangers, the young lady must have felt very uncomfortable. Neither she nor her husband looked at each other or at any of the visitors, or smiled throughout.

This ordeal having been passed, she was led to the bridal chamber, and the bridegroom left her; but foreigners crowded in, and witnessed the change of her head-dress. The veils and crown were removed, and another head-dress, also hired, was regularly built around her head. She then had to sit in a chair for inspection.

The Chinese custom is to pass all sorts of remarks on the personal appearance, often anything but complimentary, and this she has to endure with what complacency she can. As it was she was spared anything like this from her ignorance of the language of her visitors. We should hope also by their better feelings, which would shrink from wilfully inflicting pain on any young lady at such a time.

Meanwhile Ah Mow invited all his guests to be seated at the tables, which were loaded with good things in the before-mentioned apartments; and, although many went home after the ceremony, there must have been over a hundred who availed themselves of the kind host's hospitality.

Each day since, the festivities have been continued among the Chinese themselves; and foreigners who have visited the store, ignorant of the fact, have found tables still spread, the bride still in state to receive visitors, but divested of the hired garments; and the bridegroom in his finery.—Social Circle.

CAIRO DURING THE SEASON.

It is now becoming so very fashionable to visit Cairo during the winter season, and either to pass part or the whole winter there, that many will no doubt be amused to hear a little about the gaieties and amusements which go on in the capital city of the Khedive. Few, who have read descriptions of old Cairo could imagine on arriving at night in this city that it was the same place, so modern is its appearance. Driving from the railway station through the well-lighted streets into the Ubbekieh, with its shops and buildings, and café chantants, past Shepherd's Hotel and the gardens of the Khedive, to the new hotel, and the round "Place" with its fountain in the centre, the fine opera house, government buildings, &c., one could almost imagine oneself in a part of Paris, if it were not for the cries of "Yemenak" (right), "Schumalak" (left), for everyone drives the horse he chooses in Cairo, of the coachman and sayer (runners), the flaming torches of the running bearers belonging to the viceregal and harem carriages, or the sight of the Arab lying stretched out on the streets fast asleep, rolled in their rugs, the perpetual barking of the wild pariah dogs, and the baying of donkeys. These two latter noises rather disturb the peace of night for the weary traveller on first arriving in Cairo; but the ear soon becomes accustomed to the sounds, and hardly notices them. The morning light awakens one to the fact that one is in a real eastern city; the grave-looking slow-marching camels, carrying their heavy loads, with but rarely a swifter-footed dromedary, gaily tramped, his rider securely seated on his enormous saddle, a real Bedouin of the desert, in flowing burnous, gaudy turban, a waist scarf stuck full of awl weapons, a long carbine over his shoulder, and savage though good-looking, as he spears along at a swinging trot; the donkeys, of all sorts, the little over-worked carriers of stone, vegetables, and a multitude of other things—the saddle donkeys for hire, more or less good in appearance, the grand white donkeys having private owners, beautifully groomed, with their own attendant, and with trappings of crimson and gold, tassels and chains of silver, their heads reined up tightly, and ambling proudly along; the little, badly-made, low, squeaking, rumbling carts, dragged by a weary old horse or a young bullock; the cabs, or "arabages" as they are called here, and which are infinitely more comfortable than London cabs, each with its little overworked rab horse, and quantities of wild dogs, wounding, sleeping, fighting at every corner. Then glance at the people—nearly every Arab, excepting the eye, from the European, lady and gentleman, the common street Arab, with his bare feet, flowing gown of dirty light-blue cotton reaching down to his shoulders to his heels, and still dirtier brown or red felt skull cap on his shaven head, with his wife trailing after him, clad from head to bare feet in dark blue clinging garments, a heavy load on her head, and the hideous "yashmak" covering all her face except her eyes. Alas! for these who come to the East dreaming of glorious Eastern beauty beneath the modest veil. It is "real thing" is a hideous piece of black stuff, looking like a long black tongue, fastened across the face under the eyes, and kept in its place by a metal chain down the centre of the forehead, and giving the most beautiful eyes a decided expression of squinting; and the eyes nearly all are small and clear-looking. However poets and painters may rave, beautiful eyes are quite as rare, if not more so, in the East as in Europe, and then there is no variety, as they are all of the same colour, namely, black. Occasionally, of course, one sees what one reads of so often, that is, a pair of large, languishing orbs, black as night, with a fringe of eyelashes which anyone might envy, their beauty heightened by the black Kohl lines drawn beneath them, for the Eastern women are not in any way behind them in their knowledge of cosmetics. The "henna-tipped fingers," however, of which I think it is Moore talks with such vivid imagination, I do not fancy anyone would admire; the "shell-plink" of the prettiness in reality a hideous brick-red stain, with which both women and men daub their entire fingers and palms. However, there are the beauties of the lower class, and I shall have more to say presently to the beauty and dress of the harem ladies. To return to the street costumes, which are chiefly those of men, as the Turkish and Arab ladies confine their outings almost entirely to drives in the Shoubra; and though the middle-class dames do frequently appear riding astride upon donkeys; yet they are so completely shrouded with black mantles, that neither their looks nor their costumes can be distinguished, excepting perhaps the gust of wind comes, blowing out the mantle, which is made of thin silk, making the wearer look like a small inflated balloon, and perhaps displaying the corner of a gay green, yellow, or crimson sash or silk gown. The better class of Arab men who have not adopted the European dress (most of them have, always maintaining the fez, however) wear the usual Arab dress of full trousers, jacket and turban, the colours diversified according to the taste of the wearer, though rarely brilliant, and the hideous wide, large-soled shoes, yellow, green, or red. Many handsome Greek dresses are to be seen, and now and then a Syrian native dresses as those of the servants, kavasses and eysas. The former are usually attired in full trousers of snow white calico, white or lightly coloured shirt, waistcoat of gay satin or embroidered silk or cloth, a many-coloured scarf round the waist, black boots for best, and on the heads the crimson fez with its long black tassel. Many of them wear handsome watches and chains, of which they are very proud. These servants, who are butlers, footmen, chambermaids, cooks, &c., are chiefly Abyssinians, though many are Arabs or half-Arabs; they are darker skinned, some quite black, and have woolly hair. They are supposed to be better servants and more faithful than the Arabs. The kavasses and footmen of a different description; they sit on the box of the carriage, answer the door, &c., and are generally handsomely dressed in the same style; but their costumes are made of rich cloth, embroidered or braided, and they wear in their belts a scimitar and dagger or pistol. But the most graceful costumes of all are those of the eysas. These men run before the carriages or before riders barefooted, with long cane-like whips without lashes, and clear the road for the drivers. It is quite impossible in Cairo to drive or ride without a eysa, as the streets are thronged with carts, horses, donkeys, camels, carriages, and people in indescribable confusion; and as no particular side is kept, without a eysa to clear the road it would be next to impossible to move. The eysas wear white trousers to the knees, from thence downwards the legs and feet are bare, a coloured scarf round the waist, white shirt with long sleeves, which are carelessly tied behind of snow white lawn; and these, flying out behind as they run, give the appearance of wings, and are particularly graceful; a splendidly embroidered waistcoat and crimson fez, with black tassel, complete this costume. The waistcoats of the eysas are the most beautifully embroidered of all the servants, and a great deal of money is spent upon them; the more gold used in the embroidery the more handsome they appear.

The jackets of the eysas of H. H. the Khedive are a mass of gold, and look beautiful. He, and those of his family and harem, usually drive with two or more eysas in front of the horses; everyone else in Cairo drives with one eysa. Life in Cairo for the court and other inhabitants is usually commenced pretty early in the morning. His Highness the Khedive, whose habits and energy are well known in Europe, is one of the earliest to commence the business of the day. He attends himself to every detail concerning his own country and the administration of its affairs, as well as being thoroughly accomplished in the manners, customs, and governments of the countries of Europe; while his far-seeing genius and generosity in the improvements being carried on so magnificently and energetically throughout the country might well procure for him the title of Ismail the Magnificent.

All the great feasts, receptions, &c., are generally commenced early in the morning, and as His Highness usually retires rather late in the evening, frequently, if not occupied in the affairs of the country, to be seen at the opera or theatre, some idea may be formed of the immense amount of business with which he taxes himself, and the talent and energy which can support so severe a strain upon the mental powers.

There is no doubt that the early morning is the most beautiful time in Cairo. During the warm weather, in October and the first part of November, it is the most refreshing time of day; the air, which there is always abundance—is balmy and sweet, and until nine or even ten o'clock remains unheated by the sun; and then in the cold weather, although in the early morning it seems frequently almost frosty, so sharp is it, yet the effect then of a good walk or ride is as bracing as they would be in England by the seaside. At about eleven o'clock, or between that and one o'clock, most of the Cairo world of fashion sit down to a substantial lunch-breakfast, and by half-past one or two o'clock nearly everyone is out, shopping or paying calls, and from this business passing on to the inevitable drive in the Shoubra, where you usually meet most of your friends enjoying themselves in a calm drive in the beautiful shady avenue of acacias. There you see most of the fashion and beauty of Cairo driving in handsome carriages with European horses; for the Arab horses, though looking beautiful for riding, are too small and slender for harness, and are rarely used for it by the elite, excepting in small carriages, or as makeshifts. When the sun seems taking his final dip below the horizon the carriages leave the Shoubra in a rush, picking up eysas at the bridge which divides the Shoubra drive from Cairo, for it is quite outside the town, although on each side of it for two miles extend the palaces, harems, villas, and gardens of great pashas and beys in his Highness's service, including one little harem palace and several houses belonging to the Khedive himself. By the time the sun has sunk and the veil of darkness fallen over Cairo—for there is no twilight in Egypt—everyone is at home and preparing for dinner, and the usual lounge afterwards at the opera or theatre, which commences (unlike in London and Paris, where, if you wish to see the beginning of a piece you must drive at five o'clock or not at all) usually at half-past eight, now and then, if the evening is to be especially long, at eight o'clock. The opera is a most beautiful little house, hung with crimson and gold, and highly ornamented in white and gold painting. The whole of the centre of the house contains stalls which are (there is no pit) chiefly occupied by gentlemen, with here and there a few strange ladies; as none of the ladies of Cairo go into the stalls; then come the first tier of boxes, then the grand tier and a third tier above these; above that is the gallery. The first and grand tiers of boxes are almost entirely occupied by H. H. and his Court, comprising the princes of his family and foreign Consuls-Generals, and the highest ministers and officers of his suite and government; and all are let by the season, excepting one or two which are reserved for visitors to harem. The third tier is chiefly occupied by actresses, &c. His Highness's box is on the grand tier on the left side with the harem boxes, which are all enclosed with lattice work so carefully worked that it looks like a light large lace veil; but effectually hides the inmates. The box of the Hereditary Prince is in the centre of the grand tier, and that of the other princes is underneath the Khedive's; one or two boxes are also reserved for H. H.'s immediate suite. The boxes at the Cairo opera house are all large and commodious, with sofas, glasses, brackets, pegs, &c., and any number of seats—in fact, they are little rooms, and you can well receive four or five friends at a time to visit you. It is the fashion here for the gentlemen to go round between the acts and pay visits to all the ladies of their acquaintance; so that one's night at the opera is quite a little soiree or reception, and a most charming custom it is. The operas at Cairo are most beautifully placed upon the stage; the scenery and dresses finer here than anywhere; and the ballets, it is universally confessed, are in every point superior to any in the world. No expense is spared upon them, either to procure the best dancers, the most perfect scenery and appliances, or the most exquisite and tasteful costumes.

HOW TO MAKE 'EM SEA-SICK.

If anything during a rough channel passage from England to the continent can be said to be diverting, the tricks of the sailors to obtain money from the passengers may truly be called so. The patient is no sooner seated on deck, with his rugs wrapped about him, and with an air of unexpected agony plainly imprinted upon his features, than he hears behind him a rough voice saying: "Folke night, sir." "Folke" is cases out of ten the passenger turns, and in a tone which indicates his desire for sympathy, remarks: "Do you really think so? Don't you fancy it may be a little rough, just a trifle, you know." "Law, no sir; not the least fear on't; sea's like a pond, sir. Just take a look over the side, sir." "He unhappy passenger," persuaded to do that just as the steamer is drifting "into the open," receives a gust of spray in his face and returns much confused and disgusted to his camp-stool, where he sits, dismally swaying himself and searching for the friendly sailor, who, in some unaccountable manner, has disappeared. But it is only for a time. When the steamer is well on, and the unfortunate victim is beginning to yield to the influence of Neptune, the sailor returns and resumes conversation. "Well, sir, we're a slippin' along bravely, now, sir, and a folke night it is!" Bang comes a cart-load of spray to emphasize the last remark. "Have you crossed often, sir?" inquires the sailor, with an air of respectful curiosity. The victim is led to confess that he has, but that the channel always seems to have the same distressing influence upon him. "Indeed, sir, that's curious; but you can't be sick to-night, sir, for the waves are as smooth as—!" Here the victim feels a dreadful trembling under him, and rising wildly looks about as if he contemplated jumping overboard. "Oh that's nothing. Just keep your seat, sir; we was merely jumpin' a bad place. Now we are as right as one o'clock. Would you like an extra blanket, sir?" And so the victim, who had been let alone, is by turns coaxed, advised, bullied, encouraged and frightened until he becomes positively ill, and the sailor has positive mastery over him. At the end of the journey, the "channel dog" comes for his "extra blanket," which was an extremely ill-smelling oil-skin, and as he holds out his hand for the shilling or half-crown which the victim is sure to give him, he remarks: "Well, 'eh'd'a' thought your honor would have given in to such a smooth sea! My word, sir, you haven't got your sea-legs yet." With which comforting assurance he leaves the victimized, not forgetting to touch his hat as he departs.—Edward King in Boston Journal.

STORY OF A YOUNG WALRUS.

A surgeon who accompanied one of the Dundee sealers relates how a juvenile walrus, being captured, became in a few days quite at home and a general favorite among the crew. It quickly formed a friendship with an Esquimaux dog which was on board. They ate out of the same dish, although Jamie, the walrus, took great care always to secure the larger share. Whenever the dog retired to his barrel to sleep Jamie bundled his own fat carcass right to the top of him, and as dog-like rebels against such an unyielding bedfellow it is usually ended in Jamie's having it all to himself. The latter ate blubber, beef, pork and almost every thing given him, but his favorite dish was pea soup, into this he would plunge his face, which procedure left him a most comical countenance. He seemed to know his name well, for even if fast asleep the instant any one cried out, Jamie, he would rouse up, gaze anxiously about and grunt in reply. But the remarkable trait in his character was an intense hate of solitude. When alone on deck he appeared a picture of misery, grunting and endeavoring to make his way down "tween decks" after the men; and on more than one occasion precipitated himself, to his peril, plump down the main hatchway, a height of about nine feet. If the cabin door was open he at once waddled in, laid himself before the stove and went to sleep; but if the cabin were empty he would not remain a moment. Nothing made him so angry as to shake a piece of paper in his face, or to run suddenly away after caressing him; he then followed with open mouth in a great passion. When a whale had been killed and the ship's crew were busy on deck Jamie was in his glory, in the very midst of the men, covered with grease and oil. At these times he was a perfect nuisance, hindering the men in their duties by continually peering his head first between one seaman's legs and then another's, and so on, meantime running a chance of being cut in the "boning" operation. He evinced no particular attachment to any individual on board, liking all equally, from the cabin boy to the captain. But he knew full well when he did anything wrong, for if a rope's end were shown him in a threatening manner Jamie instantly would sink off, nervously casting a look over his shoulder to see if he were followed. After being on board four months he fell ill and died. The expression of the creature's countenance during his sickness was indicative of a great desire for sympathy from any one who came near. He took his medicine to the last, and when his remains were committed to the deep, regret was felt by all on board.—Cassell's Natural History.

OVER MENTAL EXERCISE.—Dr. Walter Kemper, formerly connected with the Union Insane Asylum, and now Superintendent

dent of the Wisconsin Insane Asylum, recently read a paper before a scientific society in Milwaukee, in which he takes the ground that the increase of insanity is largely due to the manner in which the minds of children are injured by the common method of teaching reading. Many eminent teachers agree with him, that it is a very irrational method which forces the minds of children, and neglects the physical culture. Dr. Kemper, in the course of his paper, says: "If additional incentive were needed, it should be found in the charge now made against the unnatural attempts to fill the minds of young persons with the lessons of the text books. The effect on the health of girls is especially noticeable. In some of the schools the more advanced scholars have to begin their studies at an early hour, and, with brief intervals, spend the day and evening in the tiresome work. A morbid condition of mind and body is an inevitable consequence. The first aim of education should be to promote physical health, for without this there can be no healthy development of the mind. The next aim should be to exercise and train the mind in such a manner as will bring forth its best powers. Recreation, hilarity and activity are essential to a vigorous mental condition, and there should be no long-continued exercise of the reflective powers."

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC!

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE.

WHEREAS it having become known to the Proprietors of Dr. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE that a worthless imitation, bearing a similar name, is exported to India, China, &c., and endeavored to be foisted on purchasers as equal in efficacy to Dr. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE, they feel it due to the public to specially caution them against this compound and request their most careful attention to the following distinctive characteristics of Dr. BRIGHT'S (the only genuine) Phosphodyne.

1st.—That Dr. BRIGHT'S Phosphodyne is sold only in cases.
2nd.—The words "Dr. BRIGHT'S Phosphodyne" are clearly blown in each bottle.
3rd.—The Registered Trade Mark and Signature of Patentees are printed on the label of every case.
4th.—Directions for use in all the following languages are enclosed in each case:—English, French, German, Italian, Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Danish, Turkish, Persian, Hindostani, Madrasse, Bengalee, Chinese, and Japanese.

Without which none can POSSIBLY be Genuine.

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE

Is the Only Reliable Remedy for NERVOUS AND LIVER COMPLAINTS AND ALL FUNCTIONAL DERANGEMENTS.

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE is patronized by the Aristocracy and the Elite, extensively used in the Army and Navy, and strongly recommended by the leading Medical Practitioners.

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE

Is sold by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors throughout the Globe. In India, China, &c., DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE is generally sold at an advance on the English Price.

The high Estimation in which Phosphodyne is held is unquestionably due to its administration, in this form. Therefore

ASK FOR

DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE

And do not be persuaded to take any Useless and Possibly Dangerous Imitation.

CAUTION TO MEDICINE VENDORS.

The Trade Mark, Label, &c., of DR. BRIGHT'S PHOSPHODYNE are duly entered at Stationers' Hall, London, and are also registered in the Chief Cities of the World. Chemists and Druggists are hereby warned that legal proceedings will be immediately instituted by the Authorized Agents, against any person or persons selling fraudulent imitations of DR. BRIGHT'S (the only genuine) PHOSPHODYNE, from this date, 1st October, 1878.
